TRAVEL TIME AT THE AWAY-FROM-HOME TERMINAL

FRA Policy:

FRA will continue to utilize a “thirty-minute commuting time” application of the laws to travel between the away-from-home release/on duty point and the crew’s lodging facilities. One way travel time of thirty minutes or less, including delays associated with transportation availability and reliability and lodging availability will be considered as COMMUTING. Any one-way travel time in excess of thirty minutes, including delays associated with the availability of transportation (e.g., time spent awaiting the arrival of the transportation vehicle) and/or lodging will be considered as either On-Duty or Limbo Time, as specified in the laws.

Travel From The Off-Duty Location To The Lodging Facility

Travel time is calculated from Final Release Time to the arrival time at the hotel or lodging facility. If the travel time is thirty minutes or less, the entire period is considered commuting time and is part of the off-duty period.

If the travel time is more than thirty minutes, the entire period is considered

Limbo Time, i.e., neither time on- nor off-duty, and the Final Release Time must be readjusted to reflect the employee’s arrival time. In the event room accommodations are not readily available after arrival at the lodging facility, all time spent waiting for room availability will be considered part of the travel time. If room availability occurs more than thirty minutes after the Final

Release Time, the entire period is considered Limbo Time and the Final Release Time must be readjusted to reflect the room availability time.

Respectfully
